High school is the education students receive in the final stage of secondary education in the United States and Canada. In the United States this lasts from approximately 14 to 18 years old in most cases. Most comparable to secondary schools, high schools generally deliver phase three of the ISCED model of education. High schools have subject-based classes.

The high school movement is a term used in educational history literature to describe the era from 1910 to 1940 during which secondary schools sprouted across the United States. During this early part of the 20th century, American youth entered high schools at a rapid rate, mainly due to the building of new schools, and acquired skills "for life" rather than "for college."

It is an unfortunate truth that there have been dozens of school massacres in the United States, particularly throughout the last thirty years. They often result in high death tolls and unimaginable grief for those involved. Even though they are in actuality quite rare, these traumatic events have many people concerned about their safety and that of their children.
