The study of electrochemical reactions by relaxation or transient techniques has expanded rapidly over the last two decades. The impetus for the development of these techniques has been the desire to obtain quantitative data on the rates of "fast"

electrochemical
processes, including those coupled to
homogeneous chemical reactions in solution.

This has necessarily

of techniques that are times. The purpose of this book is to describe may be used to obtain the desired information.

Emphasis is placed upon the detailed mathematical development of the subject, since this aspect is the most frequently of rate processes, it is necessary to disturb the reaction from equilibrium or the steady state by applying a perturbing impulse to the system. The system is then allowed to relax to a new equilibrium or steady-state position, and the transient (i. e. , the response as a function of time) is analyzed to extract the information. In electrochemical studies

the heterogeneous rate
constants are, in general, dependent upon the
potential difference
across the interface, so that the perturbing
impulse frequently takes the form of a known variation in potential as a function of time.
