" Supervision should be open and supportive, focusing on the quality of decisions, good risk analysis, and improving outcomes for children, rather than meeting targets. " Laming also recommends that meeting the GSCC ' s code of practice for employers becomes a statutory requirement for all employers of social workers. Code of practice

Poor supervision continues to hinder child protection practice

Supervision of child protection work is an area that has come under particular scrutiny. The emotional impact of child protection work is well documented (Harvey and Henderson, 2014). In her review of child protection in England, Munro (2010, 2011) identifies that there can be a high personal cost to being exposed to powerful and often negative emotions involved in this area of work.
