In 2002, Rwanda launched the most ambitious transitional justice measure ever attempted: 11,000 community courts (gacaca) to try lower-level genocide suspects. Nearly 800,000 Rwandans—one-fifth of the adult population—have been accused before these courts, including some high-ranking officers who were integrated into the new military.

Transitional justice designates an academic discipline as well as a legal and political practice that investigates these questions. After a brief characterization of its approach to justice, an innovative example of the past – the Rwandan Gacaca Courts – will be evaluated. An outlook into a future field of application, being the Rohingya Crisis in Myanmar, will point out the major challenge the establishment of transitional justice encounters: The unique nature of each country's legal ...
